Today the mountain whispers,
Its neighbor echoes back.
"What is this sudden heat?
My snowy blanket's barely gone,
The winter lasted long.

My blood is stirring all too soon,
My heart beats much too fast.
The soil beneath my feet is dry
There's little rain for flowers,
No clouds to cool the day.

The trees without their green umbrellas
Fan themselves to stir the air,
While giving birth that's premature
To tiny leaflets thrust upon a world
Poised to chill them to the death.

The forsythia bloom beside the apple
Like springtime in the north.
What hand has man dealt nature?
What careless, thoughtless, selfishness,
What role in this strange spring?

The Appalachian Trail is a place of breathtaking beauty and challenging terrain.
