Hannah is a Puritan girl, raised in a strict and unforgiving community. She is taught to fear the Native Americans who live beyond the borders of her village.

Atira is a Mohawk girl, raised in the traditions of her people. She is taught to respect the land and its creatures.

When Hannah's village is attacked by the Mohawks, she is taken captive. She is terrified and alone, but Atira takes pity on her and brings her back to her village.

At first, Hannah is resistant to Atira's kindness. She is afraid of the Mohawks and their ways. But over time, she begins to see that they are not the savages she was taught to believe.

Atira and Hannah form a deep friendship, based on their shared experiences and their love for the land. They learn to respect each other's cultures and to see the world from each other's eyes.

But their friendship is tested when the Puritans and Mohawks go to war. Hannah and Atira are forced to choose between their loyalty to their people and their loyalty to each other.

Puritan Girl, Mohawk Girl is a sweeping historical novel that tells a powerful story of love, loss, and redemption on the frontier. It is a story that will stay with you long after you finish reading it.
