Reflections On Youth And War is a powerful and moving memoir that explores the complexities of war and its impact on the human psyche. Written by a young woman who served as a combat medic in Iraq, the book offers a unique and deeply personal perspective on the realities of war.

The author, who goes by the pseudonym "Sarah," was just 19 years old when she deployed to Iraq in 2003. She served as a combat medic, providing medical care to soldiers on the front lines.
