The GDPR is the most comprehensive data protection law in the world, and it has significant implications for organizations that process personal data. The GDPR gives individuals more control over their personal data, and it imposes strict obligations on organizations that process personal data.

Key Provisions of the GDPR

The GDPR includes a number of key provisions, including:

- The right to access one's personal data: Individuals have the right to request access to their personal data, and to receive a copy of their data in a portable format.
- The right to rectification: Individuals have the right to request that inaccurate or incomplete personal data be corrected or completed.
- The right to erasure: Individuals have the right to request that their personal data be erased, in certain circumstances.
- The right to restrict processing: Individuals have the right to request that the processing of their personal data be restricted, in certain circumstances.
- The right to data portability: Individuals have the right to request that their personal data be transferred to another organization, in a portable format.
- The right to object: Individuals have the right to object to the processing of their personal data, in certain circumstances.

Obligations of Organizations Under the GDPR

The GDPR imposes a number of obligations on organizations that process personal data, including:

- Lawfulness, fairness, and transparency: Organizations must process personal data in a lawful, fair, and transparent manner.
- Purpose limitation: Organizations must only process personal data for the purposes for which it was collected.

- Data minimization: Organizations must only collect and process personal data that is necessary for the purposes for which it is being processed.
- Accuracy: Organizations must take reasonable steps to ensure that personal data is accurate and up-to-date.
- Storage limitation: Organizations must not store personal data for longer than is necessary for the purposes for which it is being processed.
- Integrity and confidentiality: Organizations must take reasonable steps to protect personal data from unauthorized access, use, or disclosure.
- Accountability: Organizations must be able to demonstrate that they are compliant with the GDPR.

Enforcement of the GDPR

The GDPR is enforced by national data protection authorities in each EU member state. The national data protection authorities have the power to investigate complaints, conduct audits, and impose fines for violations of the GDPR.

The GDPR provides for significant fines for violations of the law. Fines can be up to €20 million, or 4% of an organization's annual global turnover, whichever is higher.
